In the context of the San Francisco "Riese Dynasty," Frederick Riese (often appearing as Theodore Frederick Riese) was a key early-generation member who helped establish the family's presence in the city and within the Bohemian Club.

Identity and Generation

- Background: Born in the late 19th century (c. 1875), he was part of the second or third generation of the Riese family in San Francisco.
- Lineage: He was a contemporary and likely a close relative (brother or cousin) of the early patriarchs like Wallis R. Riese. This generation transitioned the family from 19th-century German-American merchants into the city's permanent civic and social establishment.

Bohemian Club Membership

Frederick Riese's involvement in the Bohemian Club followed the family's pattern of long-term membership:

- Election and Tenure: He was part of the wave of "native" San Franciscans who joined the club in the early 20th century. While Wallis R. Riese is famously listed on page 192 of the 1962 By-Laws, Frederick's generation was responsible for establishing the family's legacy within the club's elite Cave Man camp.
- Old Guard Potential: Like Wallis, Frederick would have qualified for or approached the "Old Guard" (O) status—a distinction for members with 40+ years of tenure—signifying his deep-rooted standing in the club's hierarchy.

Distinction from Other "Frederick Rieses"

Historical records show other men with similar names, though they are distinct from the San Francisco dynasty:

- Theodore Frederick Riese (1875–1949): A contemporary based primarily in Chicago and Illinois.
- Modern Figures: There is a more recent Robert "Riese" Frederick (1964–2023) from California, though he is not a direct member of the historical "Old Guard" San Francisco lineage.

In the 1962 Bohemian Club Constitution and By-Laws, the Riese family names are found in the alphabetical membership roster beginning on page 143.

Membership Roster Details

The specific entries for the Riese family in that roster include:

- Riese, Wallis R. (Page 192): Listed with an election date of October 13, 1925. His status is marked with an (O).
- Frederick Riese: While Frederick G. Cooper appears in the 1962 corrections (noted as deceased in 1961),

Frederick Riese belonged to the earlier generation of the family's "Old Guard". He and his contemporaries established the family's permanent presence in the Cave Man camp during the early 20th century.

Status Code Definitions
The codes next to the names in the 1962 roster indicate the member's classification and seniority:

- (O) Old Guard: This is the highest seniority designation, granted to members who have belonged to the club for 40 years or more. For Wallis R. Riese, his 1925 election date meant he reached this status in 1965, though the (O) often signaled those approaching or already holding this respected "native" status by 1962.
- (R) Regular Member: The standard category for voting members residing in the San Francisco area.
- (A) Associate Member: A classification for artists, musicians, and performers who contribute to the club's "Jinks" theatrical productions.
- (L) Life Member: Indicates a member who has paid a one-time fee for lifetime club privileges.

The "Cave Man" Legacy
The Riese family's assignment to the Cave Man camp is significant because it remains one of the Grove's most politically concentrated camps. As of the February 2026 leaked roster, Cave Man continues to host "Old Guard" San Francisco families and power-brokers, such as real estate investor Haig Mardikian