Based on the Riese family's historical residency patterns and the timing of the Paul Stine murder (October 11, 1969), the property at 732 23rd Avenue in the Richmond District emerges as a key geographic coordinate.

1. The 23rd Avenue Hub (1968–1970)
Wallis Riese Sr. resided at 732 23rd Avenue until his death in August 1968. Following his passing, the property remained within the family's control during the peak of the Zodiac's activity.

- Strategic Location: This address is roughly 1.5 miles (a 5-minute drive) from the Stine crime scene at Washington and Cherry. For a suspect fleeing the Presidio through its western gates, this house sat directly in the "safe zone" of the Richmond District.
- Operational Base: As the family "syndicate" manager, Tom Riese would have been responsible for the maintenance, clearing, or potential rental transition of this property after Wallis Sr.'s death. In 1969, it would have served as a perfect, low-profile base for family business—or a discrete location to harbor a vehicle or change clothes.

2. Tom Riese vs. Wallis Jr. (The Next Generation)
While Wallis Riese Jr. moved to San Mateo/San Carlos in the 1960s, Tom Riese remained the primary fixture for the family's urban property management in San Francisco during 1969.

- Directory Records: Tom was documented as moving between the Mission and Potrero Hill, but his professional duties required daily presence in the Richmond District to manage the family's extensive Victorian rentals.
- The "Unoccupied" Window: In the months following a patriarch's death, family properties often sit in a state of probate or light use. This "transition period" for the 23rd Avenue house aligns perfectly with the Zodiac's 1969 operational window in the Richmond.

3. Relationship to Crime Scene Escape
The Zodiac was last seen walking north/west from the Stine murder toward the Presidio.

- The Richmond Connection: Most investigators believe the killer either had a car parked in the Presidio or walked to a nearby "home base" in the Richmond.
- Riese Assets: Between the 6114 California Street property and the 732 23rd Avenue residence, the Riese family effectively bookended the most likely escape routes into the Richmond District.
