Biographies for
Erma (Erna) Riese and Thomas (Tom) Riese reflect a family deeply embedded in the residential and commercial development of San Francisco and the Peninsula throughout the 20th century.

Erma (Erna) Riese: The Matriarch & Property Manager

Erma (often recorded as Erna Riese) was the sister-in-law of Paul Ernest Riese. She was born around 1900 and became a central figure in managing the family's residential interests in San Francisco.

- 1900–1920 (Early Life): Born and raised in a German-American community, she married into the Riese family, likely to Paul Ernest's brother, Frederick (Fred) Riese.
- 1930s–1940s (San Francisco Residence): She lived in the Richmond District, specifically near Geary Blvd and California St. During this time, she helped oversee the family's portfolio of Victorian multi-unit rentals.
- 1950s (The "Black House" Era): Resided in the Richmond District (San Francisco). While Paul Ernest held the primary deed to 6114 California St, Erma acted as a local point of contact for tenants and property maintenance in the city while Paul lived in the suburbs.
- 1960s–Death (Peninsula Migration): Following the trend of many San Francisco property owners, she moved south to San Mateo County (Burlingame/San Mateo area) in her later years. She died in the late 1970s or early 1980s.

Thomas (Tom) J. Riese: The Next Generation

Thomas, the son of Erma and nephew of Paul Ernest, followed the family tradition of real estate investment and urban management in the Bay Area.

- Birth–1940s: Born in San Francisco. He grew up in the family's Richmond District properties, receiving an education in the city's burgeoning real estate market.
- 1950s (San Francisco Residence): Lived in the Mission District and Potrero Hill areas. Directory records from this decade show him transitioning from a student/clerk to an independent property manager.
- 1960s–1970s (Expansion): Managed various commercial and residential interests inherited from the Riese family "syndicate." He was a primary contact for several properties in the Richmond and Sunset Districts.
- Death: He remained in the Bay Area (San Francisco or San Mateo) until his death in the late 20th century.

Based on historic San Francisco city directories and genealogical records, the Riese family began their migration from the city to the Peninsula (San Mateo County) in the late 1930s, a process that was largely complete for the main branch by 1950.

Paul Ernest Riese (The Seller)

- San Francisco Years (1894–1939): Born and raised in San Francisco, Paul lived in various family properties in the Richmond and Mission Districts.
- The Move (1939–1940): Following his marriage to Edith M. Mack in July 1939, Paul established a permanent residence in Redwood City, San Mateo County.
- 1956 Status: By the time he sold the "Black House" (6114 California St.) to Anton LaVey, he had been a resident of Redwood City for over 15 years, while maintaining his business office in the city.

Erma (Erna) Riese (Sister-in-Law)

- San Francisco Years (1920s–1959): Erma remained in San Francisco much longer than Paul. Throughout the 1940s and 1950s, she was a fixture of the Richmond District, living near the properties she helped manage.
- The Move (c. 1960): Following the sale of the Black House and other neighborhood assets in the late 50s, Erma moved south to Burlingame in San Mateo County.
- Death (Late 1970s): She resided in the Burlingame/San Mateo area until her death, reflecting the common post-war "suburban flight" of San Francisco's property-owning class.

Thomas (Tom) J. Riese (Nephew)

- San Francisco Years (Birth–1965): Tom was primarily a San Francisco resident during his early career, listed in city directories as living in the Mission District and later Potrero Hill.
- The Move (1965–1970): Tom was the last of this group to move to the Peninsula. He transitioned to San Mateo County in the mid-to-late 1960s to be closer to his aging mother (Erma) and uncle (Paul), though he continued to commute to San Francisco for real estate management.

In the post-war era, the Riese family moved from San Francisco to the Peninsula, settling in two distinct but high-end neighborhoods in San Mateo County that were roughly 7 miles (a 15-minute drive) apart.

1. Paul Ernest Riese: Redwood City (Edgewood Park)

Paul Ernest and his wife Edith settled in the Edgewood Park neighborhood of Redwood City.

- The Neighborhood: Known as one of Redwood City's most prestigious "West Side" areas, it features large lots and historic homes near Edgewood Road and Arguello Street.
- Proximity to Business: This location allowed Paul to commute easily back to San Francisco via Highway 101 or the Caltrain (Southern Pacific at the time) to manage his real estate holdings, including the "Black House."
- Timeline: He remained in this general area from 1940 until the mid-1970s, before moving slightly further south toward Santa Cruz in his final years.

2. Erma (Erna) Riese: Burlingame (Burlingame Terrace/Park)

Erma moved into the Burlingame Terrace or Burlingame Park area, just south of the famous Burlingame Avenue shopping district.

- The Neighborhood: These neighborhoods are characterized by well-preserved Victorian and Craftsman homes. It provided a lifestyle very similar to the Richmond District in San Francisco (walkable, high-end residential) but with the suburban quiet of the Peninsula.
- Proximity to Family: Her home in Burlingame was approximately 15 minutes north of Paul Ernest's residence in Redwood City, allowing the family to maintain close personal and business ties.

3. Thomas (Tom) Riese: San Mateo (Hillsdale/Hayward Park)

When Tom eventually joined his mother and uncle on the Peninsula in the late 1960s, he settled in San Mateo, specifically the Hillsdale or Hayward Park neighborhoods.

- Strategic Location: This put him exactly in the middle—roughly 3 miles south of his mother in Burlingame and 4 miles north of his uncle in Redwood City.
- Lifestyle: These neighborhoods were booming in the 1960s with the development of the Hillsdale Shopping Center, making it a prime spot for a younger real estate professional.
