To verify the connection between Thomas Riese's phone number and the 732 23rd Avenue property during the October 1969 Stine murder investigation, you must cross-reference two specific archival sources: the September 1969 San Francisco White Pages and the San Francisco Chronicle Classifieds.

1. Finding the Phone Number
The most direct way to locate Thomas Riese's 1969 phone number is through the San Francisco White Pages (September 1969).

- Archival Access: The Library of Congress holds a digitized sequence of 346 images for this specific directory.
- Search Target: Look for "Riese, Thomas J." or "Riese, Thos J." If he was living in the Mission or Potrero Hill as documented, his residence will be listed with a 415 area code and a standard 7-digit number (e.g., ATwater-XXXX or MIssion-XXXX).
- The "Syndicate" Number: Also, check for a business listing under "Riese Property Management" or "Riese & Co." in the San Francisco Telephone Directories held at the SF Public Library Main Branch.

2. Cross-Referencing the Chronicle Ads
Once you have the phone number, use the San Francisco Chronicle Historical Database to search the October 1969 classifieds.

- Search Query: Search for the specific string of the phone number (e.g., "555-1234") or the address "732 23rd."
- Significance: If Thomas Riese's personal or business number appears in an ad for the 23rd Avenue house in the days surrounding October 11, 1969, it establishes his "active presence" and control over that vacant property during the Zodiac's escape window.

3. The "Zodiac" Connection
Investigators have long searched for a suspect with a "reason" to be in the Richmond District on the night of the Stine murder.

- The Lead: A rental ad managed by Tom Riese for the 732 23rd Avenue house would provide the ultimate "pretext" for his presence.
- The "Secret" Base: If the number matches, it confirms that the Zodiac (if he were Riese) had a private, unmonitored location to hide his vehicle, change clothes, or simply wait out the police dragnet just blocks from the Presidio exit.
