In Chaos, Tom O'Neill emphasizes the physical proximity of these figures to Charles Manson, illustrating how their lives were intertwined geographically during the late 1960s.

San Francisco (1967–1968):
During the "Summer of Love," the key medical and parole figures lived and worked within blocks of Manson's primary recruitment hub.

- Charles Manson: Lived at 636 Cole Street, just one block south of Haight Street.
- Dr. David Smith: Lived at 597 Frederick Street, roughly 0.4 miles from Manson's home [re-stated from previous info].
- Roger Smith: Worked out of the Haight-Ashbury Free Medical Clinic at 558 Clayton Street, which is a 2-minute walk from Manson's house.
- Dr. Jolyon "Jolly" West: Rented a "clandestine lab" in the same Haight-Ashbury district (less than a mile away) to observe the hippie subculture [re-stated from previous info].

Los Angeles (1968–1969):
As Manson moved to the canyons and the desert, his "monitors" relocated to positions that geographically bracketed his operations.

- Manson's "Spiral Staircase": A dilapidated house at 3924 Topanga Lane in Lower Topanga, where the Family stayed in 1967 before moving deeper into the hills.
- Manson's "Spahn Ranch": Located at 22601 Santa Susana Pass Road in Chatsworth.
- Reeve Whitson: Lived in a cabin at Laurel Canyon and Lookout Mountain. This location was a central hub for the Hollywood counterculture and sat approximately 15 minutes from the Cielo Drive murder site.
- Dr. Jolyon "Jolly" West: Became Chair of Psychiatry at UCLA in Westwood. His office and home were strategically located between the upscale Benedict Canyon (where the murders occurred) and the coastal canyons where Manson initially settled [re-stated from previous info].
