Based on public records and genealogical data, there is a clear distinction between the family of Thomas (Tom) J. Riese and that of Chapman "Chap" David Riese. While they share a surname and were both prominent in San Francisco, they belonged to different branches of the Riese family.

1. Relationship Analysis

- Family Branches:
  - Thomas J. Riese was the son of Erma (Erna) Riese and the nephew of Paul Ernest Riese.
  - Chapman Riese was the son of Casper and Ora Riese.
- The "Casper" Link: Casper Riese (Chapman's father) and Paul Ernest Riese (Thomas's uncle) were likely cousins or brothers, given they were both 4th-generation San Franciscans of German descent.
- Connection: This makes Thomas and Chapman likely cousins (first or second). They attended the same local schools (e.g., George Washington High School) and were contemporaries in mid-century San Francisco.

2. Chapman Riese (1930–2011)

It is important to correct one significant detail: Chapman Riese was not the Chief of Police.

- Rank: He was a highly respected Retired San Francisco Police Lieutenant.
- Service: He served the SFPD for decades and was a recipient of the Second Grade Meritorious Award for bravery in 1959.
- 2011 Context: The Police Chiefs in 2011 were George Gascón and Greg Suhr. Chapman Riese passed away in February 2011 in Napa, CA.

3. Implications for the "Zodiac" Theory

The fact that Tom Riese had a cousin (or close relative) in the SFPD command staff adds a complex layer to the theory:

- Access to Information: Having a relative as a Lieutenant would potentially give a suspect insights into police procedures, radio codes, and investigation blind spots.
- The "Insider" Risk: Conversely, having a family member in the police department often acts as a deterrent or, if a crime is committed, provides a high risk of discovery.
- Military/Law Connection: Chapman Riese held a Master's degree from Lincoln Law School. The Riese family was clearly well educated and legally savvy, fitting the profile of a suspect who could navigate both the real estate and legal landscapes of the Bay Area.
